Atlanta, Georgia, October 6, 2017—Pull-A-Part, a used auto parts provider based in Atlanta, Georgia, recently donated $8,084.40 to the American Red Cross to benefit Hurricane Harvey relief efforts. The funds were donated by customers who added one dollar to their parts purchases in the immediate aftermath of the hurricane. There was also a matched donation from the Arthur M. Blank Family Foundation - making the total $16,168.80.

On hand to present the check at the company's corporate headquarters in Doraville, Georgia were CEO of Pull-A-Part, Ross Kogon, and co-founder, Mark Cohen. Receiving the donation on behalf of the American Red Cross was Katie Comer, Corporate Partnerships, and Andrew Lloyd, Major Gift Officer.

“We proudly serve two communities impacted by Hurricane Harvey in Texas and Louisiana. We wanted to help do our part to help support and rebuild these communities and families affected by the storm,” said Ross Kogon, CEO of Pull-A-Part.

The American Red Cross will use the funds to provide recovery aid, including housing and financial assistance to those who were displaced as a result of the hurricane. To date, the organization has authorized upwards of $150 million in direct financial assistance to households worst hit by the storm, distributed over 1.3 million relief items, and provided over 422,000 overnight shelter stays in Louisiana and Texas.
